The importance of wine choices

Once upon a time, people in the UK tended to followed a pattern of wine drinking; white wines in the summer, red wines during winter.

Nowadays, the idea of pairing particular wines with particular foods is something the general public is becoming more aware of. Wine sold in supermarkets offers more information to consumers, both on the label, and in marketing materials. Consumers, armed with more wine knowledge, are demanding more. Restaurants are placing more importance on their wine lists, and looking for something other than just Pinot Grigio, Chianti, Sauvignon, etc; they show customers greater respect and try to offer something more than the basic wines that can be bought from the supermarket for £6 per bottle. When restaurant customers see a wine list that offers something 'different', they feel respected and special. This approach is making a big difference to the restaurant dining experience.

Terroir

Originally a French term, the word is used to describe the specific and unique characteristics of an area or region. It is derived from "terre", which means "land", but this is just one small part of the overall idea. The area where the grapes for a particular wine are grown is defined by the soils, microclimates, topography and farming and cultivation methods. These unique conditions and characteristics have a profound impact on the wine produced, so much so it is said the land itself can be tasted.
